It is clear that in 2013-2015 attendance of museums and galleries (except National History and Science museums - we will talk about them later) rapidly increased (from million to 2.5 million) but in 2015-2017 attendance still increased but on respectively slow rate (0.3-0.5 million).

Besides, there were some admission charges in 2014 in National History and Science museums. This really made their attendance fall.

To improve the situation I would like to appeal with some recommendations which probably can make our museums and galleries more attractive for people.

First of all I advise you to arrange some more different events like excursions and exhibitions - if there is something new - people would like to see it.

After that, lower prices of tickets will also attract more people who could not afford ticket before.

And the last one I would recommend you is integrating new advanced technologies: robot excursions, interactive description of artifacts, paintings, statues and so on. This is not only more comfortable and useful for visitors, this will greatly interest people and especially teenagers.

Board of directors, in conclusion I want to say that museums are an important part of our society. If we will learn mistakes of past we will not repeat them in the future. But times have changed and museums become outdated. If you want that people do not forget mistakes and achievements of their ancestors then we should go to the future as the others did it.
